Expert Group Discussion

What specific tactics does Kaba describe or endorse in this campaign? How are these tactics “abolitionist”?

Do the campaigns avoid the “perfect victim” narrative and individualizing impulse?

How does Kaba define “winning” and “losing” in this campaign?

Mixed Group Discussion

Is there a consistent theory of abolitionist organizing running across all four campaigns?

Each campaign involves an individual case that is also supposed to be legible as a structural critique. Does that dual framing work equally well across all four campaigns, or does it work better in some than others?

Whole Group Discussion

Does the accumulated weight of these campaigns persuade you that partial and local responses can add up to something adequate to the structural critique?
